SUBJECT: DAVID GREENGLASS
ESPIONAGE - R

In my absence today, SA W. Branigan took a call from SA Touhey of the New York Office who made reference to the fact that David and Ruth Greenglass were presently being interviewed. Touhey informed that the information obtained from Greenglass thus far is general in nature and such that Greenglass recalls without prompting or questioning. He advised that the information generally tended to indicate that Julius Rosenberg was the more important figure in the Soviet's apparatus. He stated that it is contemplated the interview with the Greenglasses will continue for several days. He advised that it was the recommendation of the New York Office that they be allowed to continue the interview in an effort to develop all of the information that the subjects have, rather than to concentrate on developing information concerning Rosenberg with a view to his immediate apprehension. SA Branigan informed Touhey that this was the general pattern in the Gold interviews and that unless he was advised to the contrary, it was entirely permissible for the New York Office to continue to exhaustively interview the Greenglasses before prosecutive action would be considered against Julius Rosenberg. At the same time, SA Touhey stated that the New York Office has spot checked the activities of Rosenberg and they find that he is following a normal pattern of activity. They advised that they do not contemplate spot checking Rosenberg over the weekend for the reason that they could not do so without unnecessarily alarming Rosenberg. Touhey was advised that this was desirable.

PURPOSE:

The purpose of this memorandum is to secure your approval to interview four individuals who have been connected with Julius Rosenberg. Three of them have probably been engaged in Russian espionage. ~~SECRET~~ U

DETAILS:

In connection with the confession of David Greenglass and the arrest of Julius Rosenberg, it would appear desirable to immediately interview four persons who have been connected with Rosenberg. Three of these persons have probably been engaged in espionage activities in behalf of the Soviet Union. The facts concerning these persons are as follows: ~~SECRET~~ U

Max Elitcher

According to information received during 1948 from  (b)(1)

Our investigation of Elitcher, based on the foregoing, has developed the following information: ~~SECRET~~ U

He was born September 1, 1918 in New York City. He attended City College of New York in 1937 and 1938. From 1938 to 1948, he was employed by the Navy Department. His wife is Helene Sternberg Elitcher. Elitcher and his wife have been connected with a number of Communist front organizations. In August of 1948, we considered the institution of a Loyalty investigation on Elitcher but did not do so because he resigned from his job in September, 1948. ~~SECRET~~ U

William Perl, aka., William Mutterperl

William Perl was born under the name of William Mutterperl on October 1, 1918, in New York City. He attended the City College of New York from 1934 to 1939, receiving a degree in electrical engineering. He was employed from 1939 to 1949 by the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics at Langley Field, Virginia, and at the Cleveland Airport. On December 1, 1949, we issued instructions to the field to conduct an Atomic Energy Act - Applicant investigation on him, based upon the request of the Atomic Energy Commission, as clearance had been requested by the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics for clearance of Perl, for work in connection with the effects of nuclear radiation. (S)(u)

Our investigation of Perl reflected that he was an associate of Max Elitcher and had been listed as a reference by Joel Barr. Rosenberg has told Greenglass that Barr, who is presently in Paris, France, was formerly part of Rosenberg's network. Our investigation also disclosed that Perl had lived with Alfred Sarant from 1946 to 1948 while Perl was obtaining a Ph.D. at Columbia. (S)(u)

On April 11, 1950, following the completion of our investigation, information was received from the Chicago Office of the Atomic Energy Commission that the request for clearance for Perl had been withdrawn by the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics. Subsequent to this, on May 16, 1950, we advised the Atomic Energy Commission that Perl and his brother, according to an informant of the New York Office, had stated: "In Russia people do not get rich. The poor are not so destitute and things there are on a more equal basis. That is the way it should be here." (S)(u)

We are conducting additional investigation of Perl on the basis of his possible espionage activity in line with his association with individuals involved in Rosenberg's espionage network. (S)(u)

Harry Arthur Steingart

In 1948, we obtained the address book of a Communist then residing in Mobile, Alabama, by the name of Harry Arthur Steingart. This address book lists the name of J. Rosenberg, 10 Monroe Street, New York City. (S)(u) (b)(7)(C)

Steingart was born January 1, 1900, in Orsia, Russia. He attended the Hefely Institute of Technology for a period of four years and the Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute for a period of two years, studying engineering. Steingart was naturalized in the United States District Court in Brooklyn, New York, on August 20, 1925. Steingart and his wife are presently residing in San Francisco, California, at 273 Green Street. He is employed by the San Francisco CIO Council, 150 Golden Gate Avenue, as housing chairman. He has been active in the San Francisco area in connection with Communist Party matters. His wife also is an active Communist in San Francisco. (b) (7) (C) (X) (u)

RECOMMENDATION:

It is recommended that at this time we issue instructions to the field to interview the four individuals listed in this memorandum in an effort to determine their knowledge of the espionage activities of Julius Rosenberg and to determine the degree of their participation in such activities. It is believed that the fact that they will not know that Rosenberg has not confessed may induce one or more of them to cooperate with us. In line with this, there is attached for your approval, a teletype to the interested offices. (X) (u)

June 10, 1940, until November 1, 1940, at which time she resigned giving as her reason "husband employed in New York City". She was born September 28, 1915, in New York City and her Washington, D.C. residence was given as 1935 Biltmore Street, NW. Under previous experience, ETHEL ROSENBERG noted she had been employed by the NYA School for Workers in New York City from September, 1938 to March, 1939, and also by the Wadleigh Hat Company at West 38th Street, New York City, dates not given. These records reflected further that ETHEL ROSENBERG had noted among her personnel papers that the person to be notified in case of emergency involving herself was MILTON MANES(friend), 1935 Biltmore Street, NW. It was observed that in these records she had used her maiden name of ETHEL GREENGLASS when corresponding with the Census Bureau during the month of April, 1940 with regard to her obtaining a position with that agency. This same correspondence reflected her address at the time to be 64 Sheriff Street, in New York City. Subsequent to her resignation on November 1, 1940, the Census Bureau, according to these records, received a request for verification of ETHEL ROSENBERG'S employment from the Division of Placement and Unemployment Insurance, New York State Employment Service, New York City. (u)

The service record for the subject at the United States Civil Service Commission reflected the following information (u) concerning him:

ROSENBERG received a probational appointment on September 3, 1940, as a junior engineer(radio), in grade P-1, salary, $2,000 per annum, at the War Department, Signal Supply Office, New York General Depot, Brooklyn, New York. On October 14, 1941, he was transferred to the Signal Corps Office in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, with the same title, grade, and position. On January 1, 1942, he was promoted to the position of Assistant Engineering Inspector, grade P-2, at a salary of $2,600 per annum. The next entry on this service record reflected a change in station for ROSENBERG from the Newark Signal Corps Inspection, District of Philadelphia Signal Corps, Signal Corps Procurement, Newark, New Jersey, to the Newark Signal Corps Inspection Zone in Newark, New Jersey. On February 16, 1943, ROSENBERG was promoted to the position of Associate Engineering Inspector, grade P-3, with a salary of $3,200 per annum. This record then reflected that as of February 10, 1945, his federal employment was suspended.

ADMINISTRATIVE PAGE

By letter dated June 30, 1950, Mrs. RUTH B. SHIPLEY, Chief of the Passport Division, Department of State, was requested to notify the Washington Field Office if an application for a passport is made by the subject and/or his family. (u)

Mr. ROBERT CARTWRIGHT, Investigations Division, General Accounting Office, advised that the complete pay record of the subject was available through the investigator in charge, Office of Investigations, General Accounting Office, St. Louis, Missouri. By teletype dated June 20, 1950, the St. Louis Office was requested to obtain this pay record. (u)

Washington T-1, another government agency conducting certain intelligence and personnel investigations, furnished a list of individuals having the same name as the subject who in the past have signed various Communist Party nominating petitions in the New York City area. These names together with their addresses were furnished by teletype to the New York Office on June 28, 1950, for purposes of identification or elimination. (u)

The following information pertains to MILTON MANES mentioned hereinbefore. MANES was also mentioned in St. Louis teletype to the Director June 19, 1950, as being a chemist residing at c/o Box 4273, Duke Station, Durham, North Carolina, whose name appeared as a character reference for the subject in the latter's Army civilian personnel record. The indices of the Washington Field Office reflect that MILTON MANES, aka MILTON MANNS, employed in 1942 as a general chemist for the Food and Drug Administration, Federal Security Agency, was investigated under the terms and provisions of the Hatch Act. The basis for this investigation was that MILTON MANNS of 1935 Biltmore Street, NW, Washington, D.C., had been confidentially reported to be listed on the indices of the American Peace Mobilization known as the American People's Mobilization since the German invasion of Russia in the summer of 1941. Persons interviewed during the course of this investigation stated that MANES was not affiliated with any organizations and has never expressed sympathies with the Communist Party nor does he advocate the overthrow of the United States Government to the best of their knowledge. However, confidential informants advised that MANES is a liberal and interested in labor movements. MANES in a sworn statement, which he refused to sign, declared that he was not a member of the American Peace Mobilization but that he attended one meeting and contributed less than one dollar to the organization. (u)

The following information pertains to ABRAHAM FOOKSON (not FOOKSOS) mentioned in St. Louis teletype to the Director dated June 19, 1950, as being a chemist residing at 3534 - 10th Street, NW, Washington, D.C., whose name appeared as a character reference for the subject in the latter's Army civilian personnel record. The files of the Credit Bureau, 1221 G Street, NW, Washington, D.C., reflected that ABRAHAM FOOKSON was an employee of the National Bureau of Standards. At the personnel office of this agency, FOOKSON'S personnel file reflected the following background information concerning him: (u)

He was born on October 18, 1916, in New York City, and is a son of MAX FOOKSON of 2155 Monaghan Avenue, New York City, who was born in Russia but is now a naturalized United States citizen. FOOKSON began his employment in the Patent Office of the Commerce Department on December 12, 1938, and transferred to the National Bureau of Standards, Department of Commerce, April 1, 1940, as a junior chemist (organic), and is still so employed. His residence in 1938 was indicated to be 1524 Varnum Street, NW, Washington, D.C., and his residence in 1940 as 3554 - 10th Street, NW, Washington, D.C. He is married and his wife's name is ANNE GOLDIE FOOKSON, who was born September 29, 1916, in New York City. He has also done work at George Washington University toward a Master Degree in Chemistry. At 1935 Biltmore Street, Mr. NOAH ROBINSON advised that in 1940 the residence at this address had been leased to a Mrs. FLORENCE MILLER for use as a rooming house. Mrs. MILLER was last known to have resided at 1449 Oak Street, NW, Washington, D.C., according to ROBINSON. (u)

Mrs. FLORENCE E. MILLER, now residing at 1730 Park Road, NW, advised that during 1940 and 1941 she operated a rooming house at 1935 Biltmore Street, NW. During the summer of 1940, JULIUS ROSENBERG and his wife had resided in a room on the second floor. She recalled that the ROSENBERGS had not been married very long at this time and were new to Washington. One of her other roomers, Mr. MILTON MANES, mentioned hereinbefore, had brought the ROSENBERGS to her, according to Mrs. MILLER, and had been instrumental in arranging for them to obtain a room at this address. As nearly as she could recall both Mr. and Mrs. ROSENBERG were employed locally at this time. Mrs. MILLER advised that MILTON MANES had a roommate by the name of SIDNEY MAGNES, who was considerably older than MANES and ROSENBERG. However, the three of them were extremely friendly and even had a small club of some sort. She recalled that MANES had once asked her for permission to hold small meetings of this club in his room which request was granted by Mrs. MILLER. (u)

She noted later, however, that the meetings were always held when she, Mrs. MILLER, was away from the house. She was also able to recall that other persons of the same racial extraction would often come to the house to see either ROSENBERG or MANES or both. Mrs. MILLER advised that she had received the definite impression that ROSENBERG was a great admirer of MANES and considered him to be a brilliant thinker. Mrs. MILLER also mentioned that ROSENBERG affected a mustache at this time which he told her was for the purpose of making him look older. Mrs. MILLER added that there were many other persons renting rooms at this residence during the summer of 1940 but that she could not recall that any of them were friends of the subject. Mrs. MILLER was asked whether the names of MAX and HELENE ELITCHER were familiar to her and she replied in the negative. (u)

By letter dated July 12, 1950, photostatic copies of an investigative report on the subject prepared by Washington T-1, mentioned hereinbefore, were transmitted to the Bureau and the New York Office. (u)

At 4:00 pm, SAC Wall called from Ithaca, New York, to advise that the interview is under way with ~~NY~~ Sarant, who is believed to be a contact of Rosenberg. Sarant admits that he attended political discussion groups with Rosenberg but denies other association with Rosenberg. Sarant admits that he knew Joe ~~Warr~~ (a known contact of Rosenberg in the espionage field, according to David Greenglass) and Perl (a suspected associate in espionage of Rosenberg who is being interviewed by Cleveland today). Sarant has signed a waiver of search for two Agents to search his home. He has admitted that he was a member of the Communist Political Association.

Mr. Wall advised that Sarant is evasive, won't answer questions directly, and will not volunteer information. Mr. Wall advised that he appears to be a Communist through and through.

I suggested that the search be conducted promptly before Sarant changes his mind and that the interview be continued as long as Sarant will stand for it. Mr. Wall advised that Sarant's wife has gone down to New York and he suspects she may have gone down to find out what the situation is in so far as Rosenberg is concerned. Wall can be reached through the Ithaca Police Department. He will keep the Bureau advised.

Continuing my memorandum of July 17, 1950 in this case, at 7:00 P.M., Supervisor Granville of the New York Office telephonically furnished the complaint which had been drawn up against Rosenberg, charging him with a violation of Section 34 of Title 50, U. S. Code. A complaint was sworn to by Special Agent William F. Norton before Federal Judge John F. X. McGohey, who thereafter issued a bench warrant for Rosenberg's apprehension. Mr. Granville advised that the warrant was issued at 6:55 P.M. and Special Agents Norton and John Harrington are being dispatched to apprehend Rosenberg who has been under intensive surveillance for the past several hours following the determination by the Department that he should be apprehended.

ASAC Whelan called to advise that the subject had been apprehended at his home at 7:45 P.M. and the Agents were conducting the necessary search of his apartment incidental to arrest.

At 8:40 P.M., SAC Scheidt called to advise that the search would be called at 9:00 P.M., after which Rosenberg will be brought to the office to be arraigned before a Federal Judge.

At 9:05 P.M., ASAC Whelan advised that the search was practically completed, and Rosenberg would be brought to the office promptly upon its completion.

ADDENDUM

At 9:35 P.M., SAC Scheidt advised that Rosenberg had been brought into the U. S. Court House for fingerprinting and photographing. As a matter of record he advised that the Agents went to Rosenberg's apartment at 7:42 P.M. and completed the search and left the apartment at 9:19 P.M. There was no trouble encountered. Supervisor Robert Granville was in personal charge at the apartment. Ethel, his wife, made a typical Communist remonstrance, demanding a warrant and the right to call an attorney. She was told to keep quiet and get in the other room with the children, which she did. Inasmuch as the children were making a considerable fuss and Ethel refused to talk at all, she and the children were dispatched to the mother's home in the company of two Agents.

At 9:45 P.M. Mr. Granville advised that they would attempt to talk to the subject for about an hour to see if he would cooperate, after which he would be brought before Judge McGohey.

At 10:10 P.M. ASAC Whelan advised that Ethel Rosenberg had called attorney Emmanuel Bloch, who is well known for his Communist connections, that Bloch had contacted AUSA Miles Lane, and that Rosenberg would not talk without consulting his attorney. Therefore, Agents are going to arraign him.

At 10:50 P.M., Mr. Whelan advised that the subject was being taken down to USA Saypol's Office. Saypol had come in from New Jersey for the arraignment. At that time I advised Mr. Whelan that Supervisor Lamphere had located the following information concerning Mike Sidorovich, who appeared to be identical with the individual named by David Greenglass as the husband of the unknown subject, Anne. This information comes from an applicant print in Ident dated November 17, 1941, from the Koll-Morgan Optical Corporation, Brooklyn, New York.

Name	Michael Sidorovich
Address	11 Avenue B, NYC
Born	July 6, 1916, NYC
Height	5' 8½"
Weight	179 pounds
Hair	Brown
Eyes	Brown
Complexion	Fair
Build	Stocky

I pointed out to Mr. Whelan that the address, 11 Avenue B, was in the immediate vicinity of the alleged apartment at 12th and B which Rosenberg was supposed to utilize for microfilming, although Sidorovich was listed for that address in 1941.

At 11:40 P.M. Mr. Whelan advised that Rosenberg was arraigned before Judge McGohey and remanded to the custody of the Marshal in lieu of $100,000 bail; hearing set for July 3, with the right to make motions between now and that time.

Mr. Whelan advised that considerable data such as check books, papers, cameras, etc. resulted from the search and the Agents are going over it carefully to see what is pertinent.

Inasmuch as it appears that Rosenberg will not be cooperative and the indications are definite that he possesses the identity of a number of other individuals who have been engaged in Soviet espionage, I advised Mr. Thelan that New York should consider every possible means to bring pressure on Rosenberg to make him talk, including consideration of additional charges being filed against Rosenberg at Albuquerque and a careful study of the involvement of Ethel Rosenberg in order that charges can be placed against her, if possible.

In addition, we believe we have tied together from various sources information indicating the identity of some of Rosenberg's contacts. We contemplate ordering exhaustive interviews with these individuals in the next day or so inasmuch as the publicity on Rosenberg can well lead these individuals to the belief that he has talked and revealed their identities.

Close attention is being paid to leads concerning Rosenberg's activities which were furnished to us by David Greenglass. This entire matter is being followed very closely.

CONFIDENTIAL

In my memorandum to you dated July 17, 1950, I brought to your attention additional information with respect to the espionage activities of David and Ruth Greenglass and Julius and Ethel Rosenberg. I asked for your opinion as to the institution of prosecutive action against Ethel Rosenberg and Ruth Greenglass.

In connection with the above, I desire to bring to your attention the fact that United States Attorney Everett Grantham has expressed the desire to include in the indictment in Santa Fe, New Mexico, both Julius Rosenberg and Ruth Greenglass. It would appear that it might also be possible to proceed against Ethel Rosenberg under such an indictment on the basis of her having urged Ruth Greenglass to approach David Greenglass to act as an espionage agent.

There is no question but that if Julius Rosenberg would furnish the details of his extensive espionage activities it would be possible to proceed against other individuals. In the face of Rosenberg's refusal I believe that you may desire to seriously consider instituting additional process against him in New Mexico. This might result in a change in his attitude. I also feel that proceeding against his wife might serve as a lever in this matter.

I would like to have your opinion with respect to instituting further process against the Rosenbergs. I would also appreciate receiving any decision you may reach relative to prosecution of Ruth Greenglass.

ESPIONAGE - R

Reurlet July 21, 1950. An examination was made of the mathematical equations appearing on the 5x8 cards obtained through a search of the apartment of JULIUS ROSENBERG made incident to his arrest July 17, 1950. These equations can be found in standard mathematics and electrical engineering texts. A treatise of the Fischer-Hinnen Method can be found in Alternating Current Circuits by Bryant and Correll and also in Alternating Current Circuits by Tang under graphical methods.

In accordance with your request the above cards are being returned to your office.

SUBJECT: JULIUS ROSENBERG

119801

During the search of the apartment of JULIUS ROSENBERG incident to his arrest on July 17, 1950, a manila folder containing eighteen sheets of used carbon paper was found in the desk located in the living room of the apartment. This carbon paper had been folded and was generally in a wrinkled condition.

Enclosed herewith are the eighteen sheets of used carbon paper and it is requested that the Laboratory examine them in order to determine the contents of the typing thereon.

It is requested that this carbon paper be returned to the New York Office as it is the property of the subject.

say you to the President of the United States never. He just wouldn't talk.

Or take the feminine and the masculine gender. You read the word CAT. Is it a he-cat or a she-cat? You don't know. In Italian you know immediately -- gatto, gatto -- so simple, but in America you have to see which gets kittens. Unquestionably, English was a most treacherous language.

Help came from an unexpected direction. None other than Miss Augusta Terriss, better known as The Terror, became interested in his education, partly because the boy was at an appealing age and partly because she had mistrusted him at the time of the dogfight. The basic reason for her interest, however, was the fact that she praiseworthy believed that America was a melting pot and that every immigrant should become a good citizen. Nor was this belief a platitude to be masticated on the Fourth of July or at graduation exercises; it was for Miss Augusta but a real civic duty and also something of a vested interest. After all -- postmistress, Miss Augusta Terriss was the United States.

She overcame Teo's original antipathy by paying him to cut the grass on the lawn around her house. She would talk to him as he finished his work -- him for a while, narrate stories from American history, and thus insensibly slipped into giving him lessons in English as well.

She was agreeably surprised by his eagerness. Matteo liked history and the American War of Independence was as romantic and exciting as Italy's wars of liberation. Paul Revere, Lafayette, Washington, Lincoln, he took these heroes to himself as proud possessions. In the process he made a discovery that strengthened his confidence. The Terror was uneducated. While he already knew something about Washington, the postmistress knew nothing whatever of Garibaldi, or Abdel-Krim or Danton.

The great village notable was ignorant of things outside the United States.

(Q17)

Teo's enthusiasm for history was mistaken by Miss Augusta as affection for her. This belief in turn fostered half-withered maternal feelings and to her civic duty of making a citizen was added a certain emotional attachment, a wish to help Teo in life, to prepare him for the world, to make of him a perfect American. A perfect American to Miss Augusta Terriss was a male replica of herself and in that picture Catholicism -- heathenish, image-worshiping, miracle-mongering Catholicism, had no place.

Ordinarily she would never have dreamed of interfering with some one else's religion and she had no strong evangelical drive. She simply started to make a Protestant out of Teo in the same way she might have taught him Table-manners. The first step in the boy's rehabilitation was obviously to undermine his Catholic beliefs although her knowledge of church dogmas was vague, fragmentary and ----- She had heard of Confession, but all she really knew about Catholicism was the existence of the Pope, the man who presumed to speak for God, the institution that Luther had reviled, the fountain-head of religious error and of perversion of Christ's teaching.

She drew Teo out.

"Matthew, what do you do in Confession?"

"Uh! Uataa Ke - Feeshe?"

"Confession, tell priest sin, tell priest -----"

"Oh, oh la confessions, yes?"

"Yes. What is la confess...." she couldn't pronounce it.

Confessions? Na-teen. Go church,-----

-----caught her breath, her eyes widened. "You are going to see John, aren't you?" It was more of a statement than a question as she stood there barring the doorway. Both women had forgotten Teo who watched them, his heart thumping. He saw Miss Adele touch her eyes with her handkerchief and drop her shoulders, as if to go back then suddenly straighten up defiantly.

"What if I am?" she asked.

"He is no good," said The Terror with artificial quietness. "You know he is no good. Do you want to ruin your life?" Miss Adele still stood straightly defiant. "You're so much older than he," said the Terror pitilessly and Miss Adele's back sagged. "I think you should stay home." The voice was hard implacable.

Miss Adele had dropped on the sofa, her upper body lying down. She was sobbing a helpless, angry, steady crying, with tiny sobs, that lacked force and drive. The Terror sat down by her and stroked the weeping woman's hair.

"I hate you," sobbed Miss Adele, "I hate you. You are jealous of John, just jealous." Motionless, Miss Augusta still stroked the brown hair quietly. "You are," wept the other. "You are. You don't want me to marry, ever!"

"Now, now," said Miss Augusta stroking the hair as the sobs grew quieter. She suddenly remembered Teo. "Go home," she said quietly and Teo gulped.

"Yes," he said and timorously withdrew. He closed the door behind him, and no longer fearful, looked through the window pane. The postmistress still sat caressing the hair, only Miss Adele's head was now on the lap. Something in the tableau struck Matteo as familiar; the way Miss Augusta sat, the way her hands moved. Even as he became aware of the familiarity he knew why. That was the way Father caressed Mother when Mother was ill, just like that, so strong, so calm, so gently. Only....only.....the postmistress wasn't a father. She was a she.

There was something in that scene which he did not understand, as if Miss Augusta and Miss Adele were a family and they had quarrelled. Only they weren't a family, and as he went back home, he carried an uneasy feeling of bewilderment.

When he got to the shop, Father was still there, pressing.

"Where were you?" asked Father, conversationally, as the machine hissed steam.

"At the postmistress," said Teo. There was a little pause and then he asked suddenly, "Father, do women marry women?"

Father shot him a keen glance.

"No," he answered and after a short silence asked unexpectedly, "What happened at the postmistress?"

"Nothing," said Teo startled, "Nothing!"

He waited for further questions, but father went on working instead. Matteo didn't care; he had his answer. It was very simple. Miss Augusta wanted to marry Miss Adele but she couldn't cause women don't marry women. So she was jealous, just like Miss Adele said. Good. It served Miss Augusta right. The new knowledge that he had about the postmistress gave Teo a feeling of confidence and independence which was construed as impudence by Miss Augusta. She decided that school would help keep him away from home influences and told Teo that he now knew sufficient English to start his official education. Teo was both joyful and fearful, but rather more joyful than fearful. He had been in America for nearly three months and his progress in the language was demonstrable. He did wish he spoke better English, but still, school couldn't be worse than the actual arrival in America, so he really looked forward to going with Miss Augusta on an arranged visit to the principal of Blakely High School, for the purpose of getting his permission to enter Teo in the grammar school.

Scrubbed and neat, Teo was ready at the appointed time of the appointed evening. He had a little brown paper parcel under his arm which the postmistress did not question. Together, they walked down the Main Street, beyond the lighted stores and the cinema, along the neat picket fence of the notables of the town.

At one gate they turned in passing under an arched trellis, mounted brick steps to a wooden porch and waited while the brassy tinkle of the door bell died away.

A corpulent, grey-tampled man opened the door. He had a clean pink face and rimless glasses. In spite of his paunch he stooped a little as he led the way to the living room where a desk occupied a corner. He moved a chair for Miss Augusta who sat in queenly uprightness. Opposite her, Teo sat on the edge of his chair, tightly holding his little parcel of brown paper. Their host sat back on a swivel chair and smiled benignly.

"Well," he said.

"This is the boy I mentioned to you, the Italian," began the Terror.

"Oh, yes, yes," the smile became more benign, "I remember, yes." He took off his glasses with deliberate gesture, his hand reaching across his face to disengage the second bar. He breathed on the lenses and polished them with a little red cloth, squinting near-sighted at Teo. All the while he smiled lovingly, albeit fixedly.

"Yes," he said again drawing the syllable out. "Um..." he put back his glasses, gently looping the ears. His smile became a little brighter, more animated. "Ye-es....So you are the young man. We-see. And what is your name?"

"Matteo Di-Sandol!"

"Yes. And do you speak English?"

"A lee-tale Leo-telle," said Matteo hopefully with an imperceptible nod of his head. Rimless glasses gurgled gently and Miss Augusta smiled dignifiedly.

"Leeeet," he said, and carefully enunciated the next word, "pochino, eh?"

"Si, Si," answered Teo delighted to hear the Italian word. It made of the August principal a human being, a friend, an understanding heart.. "Lei parla italiano?"

"Pochino," smiled the principal again. "I was in Italy many years ago." He spoke to Miss Augusta, "I never forgot that word, pochino. It means 'very little' and everywhere I went, that's all I heard. In everything you do somebody must get a tip, and always they'd look at the tip and say, pochino pochino. It was most annoying."

"I should think so," said Miss Augusta firmly.

"Why," said the principal for the nth time, "It's just begging that's all it is, plain begging. You cannot shake them off, like leeches. Of course, it hurts the national character you know, that sort of thing leaves its impression."

the reaction. He wasn't sorry, he didn't feel sorry, but there he was scared, thoroughly scared. The postmistress' voice had a fearful quality.

"Al-on sores," he mumbled, holding back his tears. In a wink the Terror pulled up the corners of the brownpaper and twisted them into a bag with the school trophies inside.

"Thank you very much," she told the dazed principal. "I'll see that he goes to the first grade next week. Thank you thank you. Good-night."

The man didn't answer. Overwhelmed, he only nodded and made no motion to get up as the Terror grasped Matteo by the hand and sailed out of the living room out of the house, out of the gate.

She saltzed up the street at a precipitous pace, her good leg pivoting incessantly and the club foot thumping manacingly in her haste. An iron grip held Teo's hand and as he hung back she pulled him, inexorably, impersonally.

(Q15)

His arm was no longer flesh but a connecting rod between her angry insulted hand and his fearful reluctant body. There was a clear cut feeling of a coming beating as he once had with mother when he fell into a fountain on St. Peter's square with his good suit on and mother had dragged him along as the Terror was now doing and he had known a spanking was coming, a terrible spanking.

Yet he didn't feel so much frightened as angry. Not the flaring anger which blinds reason and drives one to strike out fiercely with intent to hurt, but the dull smoldering anger based on reflection after injustice, a long standing recurring permanent injustice. Everything he had ever felt against Miss Augusta was there in his anger, every insult she had offered him, every slight, every hate he had felt against her was there inside of him, cumulated, compressed, lacking but a spark to explode.

The Terror dragged him into her house switching on the lights in the living room. Without taking off her hat and coat, she turned on him glaring.

She wanted to hit him, she had mentally sentenced him to a thrashing, but now she couldn't quite bring herself to strike him in comparatively cold blood, without the impetus of overvaulting anger. She struck her fist into her — and folded hand, once, twice, three times.

"A fine thing," she jerked out, "a fine thing!"

Too stood where a last yank had left him, hands dangling, full of hate but also full of weariness. His shoulders drooped as he waited, passive. This outward show of indifference irritated the Terror and slowly her banked anger flickered a new. She thumped her foot as she paced a stop this way, that way.

"Well, have you nothing to say? Eh?" she grasped his shoulders with her hands. "Why did you do it? Answer me!" She shook him violently but he was limp and silent in her hands. The passive resistance infuriated her. "Answer me!" she half-shouted and her hands tightened viciously as she shook him harder, harder, harder. She felt his body tensing, resisting, his hands grasped her wrists, and now as he showed fight she almost exulted. Miss Augusta Terriss would never have admitted it but she was provoking the boy into something that would justify beating him.

Sadistically her biceps strained and the wrist-tendons corded, she squeezed his shoulders her eyes intensely malevolent. Too involuntarily cried and feeling his hands before her strength, he quivered his head in a swift twist and dove for the hand on his right shoulder. His teeth closed snugly over the top knuckle of the index finger and the flesh between it and the thumb, a solid, well fitting mouthful, on which he clamped his jaws, and closed them hard as he could.

Miss Harris gave a cry of pain. The upper teeth sinking between the two knuckles were pressing on the bone with excruciating pain. With instantaneous reflex the bitten hand relinquished the hold while the other hand swept through the air like a scimitar in a powerful, open-handed blow that smashed against Teo's head, jarring open his jaws and sending him crashing against the sofa. He teetered on his feet, regained his balance and hurled himself on the postmistress with wordless blind ferocity. She tried to hold him off but he kicked at her shins so that she lost all control and met him head on, her open hands smacking him with shattering force, left, right, left. His head was ringing, dazed, hurting and helpless in his gut-ripping hot red. The tears came, bitter, frustrated, rapid.

"Sona na beech," he screamed under the blows, "Sona beech!
Sona na beech! Sona na beech!"

The postmistress kept striking him like a person possessed until suddenly the instinct of self-preservation overbore his hatred and he ran from her taking cover behind the massive easy chair in the corner. Still she advanced upon him, with frightful determination pushing the easy chair back, back to trap him.

in the corner so he could not escape. Too late he guessed her intention and there he was cornered, his little face livid white above the deep ultramarine the chair his features distorted in fear and insane hatred, his eyes wild and blood shot. Even as her hand rose for the blow he screamed,

"Fuk-ia! Fuk-ia! Fuk-ia!" Eyes closed, spittle drooling from his mouth he screamed waiting for the blow that never came. The awful word had penetrated her consciousness bringing her to her senses so that she saw his distorted face and realized what she had been doing. Teo opened his eyes and saw her, aghast, retreating. "Fuk-ia, Fuk-ia, Fuk-ia!" The words were like physical blows that sent her reeling, reeling step by step until she came until she—, and stared at Matteo with horrified eyes as the principal had stared. Teo was now in the middle of the room looking at her, panting as she was panting, both beyond the high point of their emotion.

"And all I did for you," she gasped, as if trying to excuse to herself the blows she had given him.

"Du for-a-mi!" the scornful answer came from deep in his being. "Du for-a-mi! You tell-mi da wid da mant, yeh, shoor, baat inside da head you tink cap! Detza you du for-a-mi! You tink-a uap, uap, uap; you tink-a aap no gud-a; uap a bestia....!!! Yeh! You du for-a-mi! You du-a urt for-a-mi!" His voice had climbed in its terrible accusation until it was thin and breaking. She understood too late and her face went white at the abyss that was revealed. From her stony stillness Teo sensed he had the advantage. In any case, he was relieving his heart. He went right on.

"Youh, you da for-a-till! You ett-a mil! Biff! Bang!—— you ett-a little mil! Yeh, No ett-a kres-adele, Not even realizing what he said, he delivered a coup-de-grace, Fir-a kres adele, you mak-a da lovi!"

Her first impulse was to hit Teo but as it rose, it vanished. The full import of the unfair accusation probed some—— in her conscience, and suddenly the Terror dropped her face in her hands. The Terror was weeping!!

Fearfully Matteo went. On the chair by the door he saw the brown paper parcel and he took it along, automatically. He walked up the street, bruised, aching and tired. Within him a host of confused and conflicting emotion were so thoroughly muddled that his mind it had a smudgy quality, like a palette where brilliant colors had been indiscriminately mixed to result in a dusty indefinable gray-brown. He was hardly aware where he was going and he had gone beyond the railway tracks to the bridge where realized that his house was behind him. He could see the lighted windows in the bulky dark building but he——willing to go home. He leaned over the rail, and half unse—— watched the river.

Slowly his feelings extricated themselves. Anger was no longer there; resentment had dully subsided into a bottom layer ever present but no insistent. He felt alone, quite alone in——a night on the iron bridge above the black water. Yet he was not afraid or lonely. An unnoticed feeling of victory was swelling up within him imperiously, rising like the ——pull——ing off a horse. The Terror had wept! He had made her weep!! Rooted in his resentment there rose a tremendous feeling of strength, a feeling of austere, oaken confidence. He knew he would go to school, first grade, any grade. He would show her, him, everybody, what a wop could do. By whatever means, he would show them. He was strong within himself and he would win. Just what he would win never even crossed his mind. He would win, a l——win. Always, in all ways by any way and every way.

Flowed the water below below him, black, stri—— with. There must have been eddies and whirlpools but they could not be seen. Only the main currents were visible, like the tracks of a giant eels, merging fluidly and powerfully in a continuous flow, steady, muscular, irresistible. Elementally purposive,——could not choose but to go forward, and the dark moving waters soothed him to unconscious consonance. For him, too, there was no choice. Serenely, Matteo went home.

We have several sections, (d)yeing Section, Spotting Section, Dyeing Section, Pressing Section.... Our Pressing Section has ten machines, is that imaginable, ten machines in one section alone.

Teo's father whistled.

"Like mine eh?"

"No, No. Excuse me but well, you know, your machine is antiquated."

"Antiquated?"

"No offense, no offense!"

"No offense at all," smiled Raffaele shrugging his shoulders. "It's not my machine and nothing out of my pocket. And do they pay you well?"

"Well enough," evaded the other, "well enough," Raffaele dropped the subject for the moment, but only for the moment. Halfway through the banquet both had imbibed their share and they were calling each other by their first names. On the slightest pretext Bastiano would tell how large the plant was and after one such description, Lello slipped in a casual question.

"A magnificent plant! And how much could a presser earn in such a plant?"

"Thirty-five dollars," said Bastiano.

"A week?"

"Sioure."

"Porco Dio," marveled Lello who seldom swore. He thought of his own wage of twenty dollars and swore again. "Porca Ma-growing angry at her vaulting ambitions until finally he'd tell her to shut up. Then he'd go off to chew on her ideas slowly digesting them as she peered into the ovens as he wielded the long wooden shovels as he sold his crackling loaves. Ultimately, his-----came. Next year, God willing, they would have a truck and a driver; in two years-----in two years perhaps a new bakery, brand new from foundation stones to roof tree, with gleaming modern ovens. In two years.....but don't let anyone know or surely there would be an evil eye. Envy never sleeps.

On the Buzzanga wedding day, Annuccia had three kitchens to supervise beside the one in the new house. There was Flora's mother's kitchen, Peppa's kitchen and the kitchen in the Buzzanga house where Teo's mother kept watch. All were capable women and Annuccia had no reason to worry but she did, incessantly talking about her four stoves and her four ovens, and were the ashes shaken down clean and was the fire steady and were the ovens hot. On her stove a huge pot of sauce simmered. It had been on for five hours, a heavy, spicy brew to crown mounds of spaghetti. It had been ritually made. First the bacon and lard with hearts of onions and garlic chopped ever so fine, all set to fry on a medium fire. After the heavy odor of pork had mingled with the sweet pungency of the onions, in went the cubed steak followed by giblets of thirty chickens, an imposing mass of insides rarely to be seen in such quantities. When the whole had browned to satisfy Annuccia a bowl of chopped olives as sacrificially

He felt resentful that he had been forced to make such a long speech and seemed to struggle with himself as to whether he should add anything ----- finally he started to lead the horse away in silence but after a step he stopped and looked at her. "Go to the devil" he-----went out.

around the edges of the moving crowd. He felt lonely and angry at Sally and Arthur for deserting him, and in no time was very sorry for himself. Only Peppone noticed him, tweaking his ear as he passed by. Father had gone to Mother to tell her about the wedding and Teo could have gone too and felt at home, but the magnet of the hustle and bustle held him and he kept looking at the arriving cars.

Donna Assunta Buzzanga, mater familias, was taken into the new house by her two strong sons and sat at the end of one of the tables. People jostled into the room and found seats for themselves while the brides momentarily disappeared. Teo moved from the outside to the doorway still silently looking. The people he knew seemed so different all in black or dark coats, squarely cut, carefully pressed and tightly buttoned. The familiar faces and features seemed unreal above the stiltedly moving bodies, something vaguely spooky, a collection of store clothes were walking about on their own, powered by the devil.

Conversation shouts and laughter crackled on unabated as an unknown couple descended on Teo with a "Ha here he is," and winy kisses smacked his cheeks offending his nostril. He held himself rigid while they slobbered over him, "Looks just-like-his-grandfather," "takes-after-his mother," what was he suppose to be, he thought in cold anger, a baby? Whoever the couple was, they seemed to have some right over him, the right of distant relatives over a new link in the continuity of the clan. He wished they'd go to hell. "Parlez-vous francais," said the woman — surprising him into saying, "oui, oui." Whereupon she turned to her husband triumphantly. "You see what schooling means." She tried no more French, however, and they both went on to find seats leaving Teo with a sense of irritated bewilderment. More and more, he disliked this wedding. The bride had returned, wine flowed freely huge platters of steaming spaghetti appeared. Teo and Flora's mothers were ———, helped by Trisa, Millie and Settina, Matteo hovered on the outskirts of the table and snatches reached his ears:

————— work only he gave me and then I told him, sonafabitch, what kind of Italian you are, give that Pollack more work then me right out I tell him and he said ——— and after the Boven the fever went down. The Blessed Virgin be thanked,....pretty as a picture even if she did get married in a hurry....they got it to spend, that Assunta watches ——— all the same, always after the hair ——— just another finger, whoa, whoa - Veto's the one, not Bruno....amongst the fragments of conversation, understandable yet meaningless, reinforced Matteo's sense of loneliness and mental misery.

Also, he was hungry and unknowingly that sharpened his feeling of disgust and dislike for the whole event. He hated everything about the wedding, the smell of food that made him hungry, the smell of wine that made him sick, the ignoring faces that made him lonely, everybody was eating and drinking like pigs. The very plentifulness of food and wine was disgusting. The wedding was a pig-sty and they were all like animals, gobbling things down.

In his mind, he compared this wedding with Uncle Paul's wedding in Rome when Grandmother Beatrice had been all dressed in black clothes and looked so tall with her high-knotted hair. Norma Bice had held him tight by the hand right through the Mass at San Pietro in Vico and then into a carriage with the top down and the horses clop clopping and they had come to a big restaurant and there was a long table with a heavy table cloth and napkins so big he tucked one under his chin and it covered all his body. Way away, at the other end sat Uncle Paul and Aunt Kathilde but he didn't like the new aunt, she was too short. There had been waiters in fancy clothes and the banquet had many courses and each was served in an individual dish and the portions weren't very big as Norma Bice said but the tableware was silver and the glasses were crystal and the waiters poured wine from bottles with a napkin around them and it was all very, very exciting. And very civilized. No one shouted except Kathilde's brother, but what could you expect from him. He had a grocery store.

Each person had a little box of sweets, with confetti and almond paste and torrone which you only got at Christmas. The box wasn't very big and the ice cream at dessert was very little, but Grandmother gave him her own shape because her teeth hurt and so it wasn't so bad after all.

Squire Buzzanga's voice jarred into his memories. The squire had been drinking heavily and was in an expansive mood. He acted and dressed as if this were his day. He wore a cutaway and piped vest with a diamond stickpin in his cravat, outshining the groons themselves in sartorial splendor. He stood now like a peacock, his paunch proudly assertive, his gold tooth flashing, one hand on Lester's shoulder and the other holding a wine glass. He was proposing a toast.

"Mother Nature bless you both my beautiful girls," he exclaimed, "and now that it's been canonized by the Church, I hope, Nestina, that you'll give us a boy." There was a roar of laughter, a clapping of hands a drawing of wine-glasses. Ernest blushed prettily and Veto grinned, slouching in his chair with the air of a sated conqueror, fingers playing with his teaspoon.

Teo didn't quite understand what had been said, but from the way men laughed and women smiled he knew instinctively that the talk was around the subject of the Forbidden Fruit. But he wasn't interested. He cared only his clamoring stomach, and he thought it was time to go into the kitchen to assert his needs. Then he saw Arthur signalling to him, and reluctantly cursing his pride went to him. Arthur and Salvy were going for the pigs, did he want to go along? He did.

The pigs were beautiful, their whole skin blushing red on the flat black pans. There were two of them and they were placed on the flooring of the truck with something like reverence, Salvy and Teo sitting on boxes beside them as if keeping wake, while Arthur drove, slowly.

While the truck rolled on, Teo and Salvy tried to talk but it was an effort. They were too hungry and the pigs too luscious. Their eyes seldom wavered from the porklets, and then, hesitatingly at first, Teo ran his index on the nearest hide and licked his finger. Delicious. Like Iant's immovating Chinese, he found the flavor very tempting. He used two fingers, then three, and by that time Salvy was bestifically licking his. Growing bolder Teo broke off a tiny piece of crackle; truly it was heavenly. Salvy found a splinter too.

The two youngsters were now making noises of great satisfaction to spur each other on, and soon Arthur wanted to know what they were doing. Salvy gave him a tiny splinter and after Arthur stopped the truck and crawled back to join the others.

The three boys squatted around the two pigs, picking up a tiny sliver here, a tiny fragment there. Each time, each one felt he would stop, but the taste enticed them on. Then Arthur saw a little piece right under the tail where the pig had been sewn together after being cleaned. It was a nice little piece about an inch long, definitely pulled apart from the skin and would never be missed. Arthur took a penknife and cut the piece off. He popped it into his mouth and chewed with relish.

"Hog," said Salvy, "you could give us a piece."

"Here," Arthur held out the knife, "help yourself."

(Q12)

The appearance of the penknife had introduced a tension amongst them, as if a fourth person was there with them, whispering to them, suggesting things that must not be said, which must not even be considered. It was temptation, seductive, alluring, backed by hunger and abetted by the lingering flavor on their lips.

Salvy took the penknife and found a little piece. It wasn't sticking out like Arthur's piece; he had to splinter it off yet it wasn't very noticeable. Teo's turn, and he operated on the other pig. The penknife made a second round, the pieces getting a little bigger, the boys a little bolder. The little bits powerfully stimulated their appetite; their mouths watered. Said Teo, "If this was my piece."

it and wolfed it. The sight affected them as blood affects hungry dogs. Arthur ripped a piece and everybody followed. The leg was cleaned in a twinkling ——— from the knee.

The white and pink stump brought back reason. They had to go home. Home! with a leg missing ——— wedding day! They looked at each other and were frightened.

"Your fault!" said Salvy viciously to Teo, but Arthur stopped that immediately.

"No sense fighting," he said, "we got to go home."

The truck moved on its occupants st———introspectively by wishing they have never done it. Teo thought up a scheme. He would go in first and confess to Flora's mother. She was nice. She would protect them. Nobody need know a leg was gone. Even as he talked knew it wouldn't work and so did the others. They arrived in funeral silence and pulled the pigs out as reluctant as if they were going to the gallows.

Whatever hopes they might have had of being shielded by Flora's mother were dashed by Annucia. She came out first, took a glance at the pigs, immediately spotted the jagged leg and easily assessed the culprits. She had drunk a couple of glasses and her persecuted mind saw herself hold responsible. She grasped the flat pan and ———waddled into the convivial scene holding the pig high above her head and shouting.

"Look at the pig the bandits what do they look-at-the-pig!"

The room was suddenly silent wondering. Up walked Annucia and back she came. "Ruined it; the ———heartless wretches! Look at the pig! But no one would look since she catastrophic, everyone that is except her husband. (Pa) b(1)b, the baker reached for her skirt as she passed, held her and rising took the tray from her hands. He looked once and he looked twice and a ludicrous expression spread on his face, a mixture of "I-thought-so" and excuse-me please. Said he was—

"A scandal most strident! The boys have eaten a leg!" There was a roar of relieved laughter and just then Flora's mother walked in carrying the tier of the second pig.

"This one," she smiled, is still virgin!" The laughter roared anew.

"The culprits!" shouted Bruno, and twenty voices took up the cry, laughingly, tipsily. "Yeah, forward the culprits."

The three boys had helped bring the pigs into the kitchen and had been held enthralled by Annucia's performance. With morbid curiosity they had listened to every syllable and now suddenly, they turned to flee but to late. The outside door was blocked by Teo's mother and there was not other way but the dining room. Annucia shoved them in vengefully, and there they were, the three of them standing before the tribunal of the nuptial quartet.

Chairs scraped, the wedding guests turned to enjoy the little by-play. Bruno expanded, feeling himself the center of attention, feeling himself a man-with-a-wife, a master. He was sure Arthur was the instigator of the mutilation and he baited him with brotherly malevolence.

"Well, now," said Bruno, paring his teeth under his moustache in a false smile, "who thought up this little joke?"

(Q9 &amp; Q11)

"Joke, hell," said Arthur, we were hungry. There was a roar of sour laughter and Bruno smiled smugly as if he were the witty one. Teo looked at him and hated him-hated him for trying to punish them because they had eaten a little leg. While all the others in the room had been gorging themselves earlier feelings about the wedding swept over him and he hated them all, hated everyone except father who he knew was watching. Teo made believe he didn't see him, he was little disgusted with his own father for being present at this undignified swilling.

He thought, "What would the postmistress say to this this winey, uncivilized gathering? She would look down on them and she would feel wop, wop, wop, all over. Well that's how he felt, too, he felt hatred for them and shame because he spoke the same language. He didn't like the postmistress but she at least didn't guzzle wine and she didn't speak dialects.

(Q9 &amp; Q11)

And yet even though Teo hated the scene, something way down deep was attracted, something within himself applauded. The guests were enjoying themselves, everyone,-----and no one was being harmed. Food was plentiful, he himself would soon eat all he could hold and more, big bins of ice cream were ready for dessert and he knew there would be an orgy of ice cream for the youngsters. A pain-----feeling for the diners, for Popone, for struggled against his August (a)-conditioned-----the struggle-----made him angrier still with himself, with everyone else, with Bruno who was smirking and prancing almost, he was so cocky.

"So," Bruno sa-----zed, "so you are the one. You got these two young boys into wickedness-----was mimicking a priestly attitude and the imitation was very poor but everyone laughed generously. As Arthur did not answer, Bruno got a little angry. He had drunken ( ) so that the border between humor and seriousness was obliterated and his voice turned ugly.

"Tess up. You started it dincha? Don't be yellow, you did, didcha?"

Teo's anger focused itself on Bruno-----he said vehemently and belligerently, "I DID"-----ed. People chuckled and laughed, but Teo's pugnacity was already gone. Even as he spoke he regretted it-----he saw the familiar severity compose Father's face, his regret became fear. He would get a spanking, a real lesson given. No longer belligerent, his mind groped hastily for defensive words, for extenuating circumstances, for explanations, for something, anything at all to appease father's stern eyes. Something was struggling to break through his consciousness, a vague feeling of a similar predicament and somehow, of a way out. It was it... there right on the threshold of consciousness-----this r----- Whatever it is Father's waiting. He was thinking (dryly)-----ly of Father, speaking only to Father, as the dim remembrance became more solid, more about something definite, storks, no, herons, legs of herons, he almost had it-----oh what was it."

Under Father's grim glance he tried to hurry and his words poured out half-incoherent.

"Yell One!, the leg comes down..." he blurted one thought still incomplete. The leg comes down...the leg comes down...the leg comes down... Oh, i-m-m-chichi-bio! Details flooded his mind and he realized how silly the whole thing was how it had nothing to do with his troubles, how...

(Q5)

(Q5)

"Uh?" said Bruno puzzled and everyone was now listening intently, in utter silence, leg that? leg comes down? What are you talking about?"

Teo blushed. Father's eyes had an amused gleam in them as if father knew what he was thinking and that further unnerved him. He was the center of attention and he couldn't say anything. It would only sound stupid. They wouldn't understand. His mouth was dry, throat constricted.

"Well?" urged Bruno, "What is it?"

"Nothing," half-whispered the boy and swallowed. His voice came clearer. "It's nothing. It's .... it's just a story..." he trailed off lamely.

For some unknown reason people were laughing "Bravo!" shouted Pep, one happily. "Give us the story!" There was hard clapping, laughter, applauding grunts, noises and words. "Put him on a chair!" someone called out, and before he knew what had happened to him, Teo was up on a chair between the two tables. He looked down, dazed, but the faces were friendly and he felt as if it were Christmas, and Christmas in Rome, when the whole clan gathered for dinner, he used to stand up and recite the latest French poem learned in school. He was proud when he did that and everyone petted him and gave him money and sweets and he never had any shyness or fear. It was just like reciting in class and as he now looked around he felt the same way. His fear left him and the feeling of stupidity as well.

"Come on," smiled — "Tell us the story." A very composed Teo made a little bow while Arthur and

(Q5)

Salvy looked on open-mouthed. A sprinkling of applause greeted him.

"Ladies and gentlemen..." began the child and there was a roar of delight. Bravo! Bravo! Applause!

"The story of Chicibbio!"

"?" said mother prompting, a little smile on her lips.

"Mister Boccaccio," he said conscientiously, and another burst of applause crashed around him. People were leaning forward in pleased expectation, eyes warm with fondness.

"Once upon a time," he began and many smiled, "there was a NOBLEMAN and he had a cook named Chichibbio. One day the NOBLEMAN went hunting and brought back a heron for Chichibbio to cook. So Chichibbio was roasting it on a spit, but a woman came in the kitchen. She was the beloved of Chichibbio.

"Please give me a leg," she said. And Chichibbio said 'no' and she said, 'please, I want it very much.' And he said 'Are you crazy? Master will kick me.' And she said, 'If you deny me, I'll deny you.'"

An appreciative gale of laughter came from the audience. Teo was in fine fettle. Next to father sat a dark-faced man with slicked down hair. He was Bastiano Palumbo, the brides' brother. Signor Palumbo now shouted "Deny you what?"

Teo knew. Yes sir, his digging had taught him. A Pica, that's what it was! Flushed with success and driven to show off, he was right on the point of throwing back the answer, but luckily there was Father sitting next to the questioner.

Father was smiling slightly so maybe he wouldn't get a licking after all, but if he said that word, Father would kill him. So he choked the answer back and said nothing, waiting for quiet...

"So he gave her the leg," said Brunco.

"...the leg's leg," corrected Vito meaningfully and everyone laughed again and Teo made believe he didn't understand, but he understood all right. Poles and middles and carps and bananas and legs, all the same thing. He wasn't dumb. But Father was looking at him and he was afraid he could see right into his head. He tried not to think of such things, and mentally repeated, no, no, I don't understand! But he did.

"Let him go on," said Peppone and there was silence.

"When the NOBLEMAN saw the leg was missing he sent for Chichibbio. 'Where's the leg, Chichibbio?' 'Leg, master?' 'Don't play stupid, Chichibbio! What did you do with the leg?' Chichibbio was very frightened and he said the first thing that came into his mind.

Father was smiling. "Like you," the smile was saying. Father knew so much sometimes.

"He said, 'Master, herons only have one leg'. 'Two legs,' said his master. 'One leg', said Chichibbio and the NOBLEMAN said 'Tomorrow morning we will see how many legs herons have, and then you will be beaten for a thief and a liar.' Poor Chichibbio didn't sleep all night. The next morning they went looking, the NOBLEMAN on a horse and Chichibio on a donkey. Chichibio was very unhappy and he was very scared. Well, they came to a lake and there was a row of herons, asleep. And can you imagine? They were all on ONE

Mr. Granville called from New York at 12:20 A.M. July 21, 1950, to advise that the interviews with Max and Helene Elitcher had just been completed. He said that both appeared to be cooperative, a signed statement had been obtained from Max Elitcher, and he had voluntarily consented to a search of his premises, which had been done, but the material obtained had not as yet been evaluated. Granville said that the Agents were still at Elitcher's place on Long Island but that he would get a teletype into the Bureau the first thing in the morning.

Elitcher claims that Rosenberg contacted him approximately eight times, beginning in 1944 when Elitcher was working at the Bureau of Ordnance in Washington on fire control equipment for Navy vessels. Rosenberg spoke of the great war effort and sacrifices of the Russians and said that some people were contributing to the Russian war effort by giving information on secret material and developments. He asked Elitcher to contribute by giving reports and drawings concerning the work on which he was engaged.

On approximately seven occasions after that Rosenberg solicited Elitcher for information but Elitcher maintained that he never gave information either orally or in writing. He finally told Rosenberg that he had thought the matter over and could not go along with him. He then told Rosenberg that he contemplated going to New York to work for the Reeves Instrument Company on fire control equipment. Rosenberg expressed his disappointment and indicated that he would prefer that Elitcher stay with the Bureau of Ordnance.

Elitcher advised that Rosenberg told him that Morton Sobell, Elitcher's neighbor, who is employed at the Reeves Instrument Company at the present time, was one of the persons furnishing information to the Russians.

Granville said that Sobell left the Reeves Instrument Company about June 18, 1950, and failed to return. He left his residence with his wife and child on June 25, 1950, and his sister-in-law, who is now occupying his home, advised Elitcher that "Morton has gone to the farm to recuperate." Elitcher said that recently Sobell appeared to be very nervous.

Mr. Granville advised that he has not made a file review on Sobell as yet.

Bureau files reveal that Morton Sobell was born on April 11, 1917, at New York City. His parents, Louis and Rose Sobell, were born in Russia. He is married to Helen Monitor Sobell and apparently resides at 164-17 73rd Avenue, Flushing, New York, directly in the rear of the Elitcher home, at 164-18 72nd Avenue, Flushing, New York. Sobell is a graduate of the City College of New York with a Bachelor's degree in Electrical Engineering. He was employed by the Navy Department, Bureau of Ordnance as an Assistant Electrical Engineer at Washington, D. C. from January 27, 1939, to October 1, 1941, when he resigned to enter the University of Michigan.

He and Elitcher roomed together in January, 1941, at Washington, and attended City College of New York together. He was known to be an associate of reputed Communists, including Bernice Levine, who was named as a suspect in the Gregory case by Elizabeth Terrill Bentley. He was reportedly a member of the Washington Committee for Democratic Action, the American Youth Congress, and the American Peace Mobilization. A complete review of all references on him has not been made as yet.

ADDENDUM:

I spoke to ASAC Whelan on the morning of July 21, and instructed that every effort be made to locate Sobell immediately. Mr. Whelan advised that the New York Office has already launched an intensive investigation to locate Sobell. A complete review of our files on Sobell, both in New York and here at the Bureau, is being made.

On the morning of July 25, 1950, ASAC Lally, of Baltimore, called, referring to information received from the New York Office arising from a mail cover of Rosenberg, that Rosenberg received a letter postmarked July 19, 1950, from Baltimore on stationery of the New Howard Hotel with no identity of the sender revealed. Mr. Lally pointed out the bare possibility that Morton Sobell may have sent the letter to Rosenberg and may be contemplating leaving aboard the Russian ship "Krasnador" presently in dock at Baltimore. He advised that since the receipt of this information from New York, Baltimore Agents have been watching the "Krasnador" to see if anyone goes aboard, but the possibility exists that someone may have gone aboard the ship as early as Saturday, July 22. He wanted to know whether Immigration should be requested to make a physical check of the ship on the bare possibility that Sobell and his wife and children may be aboard.

I suggested that he arrange with Immigration to make a precautionary search of the ship which would not be highly unusual; that the identities of Sobell and his wife and children not be given to Immigration and Naturalization but that they be requested to advise the Agents if any passengers are discovered. In this way the case will not be exposed and yet a check can be made of the ship. Mr. Lally advised that this could be done and he would so instruct.

 On the night of July 24, 1950, Mr. Clyde Smith, of the Cleveland Office, called to advise that the interview with Mike Sidorovich was under way; that Sidorovich had furnished information concerning his background but denied any participation in espionage activity. The Agents were preparing to accompany Sidorovich to his home for the purpose of interviewing Anne Sidorovich, his wife, and to attempt to make a search of the residence. Mr. Smith advised that from the interview up to that time it appeared that Sidorovich might give oral consent to search his apartment, but probably would not give written consent. He desired to know whether the Agents should go ahead on oral consent only. 10

Mr. Smith was advised that if Sidorovich was willing to have the Agents search the apartment, he should be willing to so state in writing; that we did not wish the Agents to place themselves in a position where, if at a later date Sidorovich confessed to participation in espionage activities, his statement could be attacked on the grounds of an illegal search. Consequently, Mr. Smith was advised that the Agents should point out to Sidorovich that if he desired to be placed on record as cooperating by allowing the search, he should give the consent in writing, and conversely, if he desired to be placed on record that he did not wish to cooperate, the search would not be made on a mere oral consent. I pointed out to Mr. Smith that it sometimes takes a number of interviews and reinterviews to get these people to talk and we do not want to put ourselves in a position that our activities have not been legal or open the Agents to attack by reason of the fact that Sidorovich and his wife may claim that they did not give oral consent for the search. C

Office Memorandum • UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

TO : Director, FBI

DATE: July 25, 1950

FROM : SAC, New York

SUBJECT: JULIUS ROSENBERG
ESPIONAGE - R

ReButel dated July 24, 1950 and summary report of SA John W. Lewis dated July 22, 1950 at New York City.

There are transmitted herewith five copies of the following pages to be added to referenced report:

Revised copy of Page 2A and Pages 24a, 24b, 24c, 24d and 69.

It is requested that these be inserted in the summary report.

Information to the effect that ROSENBERG stated under oath to the Civil Service Commission that he was not a Communist is not being set forth inasmuch as available documentary evidence of the Civil Service Commission fails to reflect that he made such a specific statement under oath. There is indication that he did make such a statement to a Civil Service investigator and efforts are being made to locate the investigator for interview. It is anticipated that if this interview is productive the investigator will be set forth as a witness in a supplement to the summary report to be prepared prior to the trial.

The Albuquerque Office has been requested by teletype dated July 25, 1950 to ascertain the accuracy of the date November 20, 1945, set out on Page 42, and the date November 30, 1945, set forth on Page 43.

Office Memorandum • UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

TO : THE DIRECTOR

DATE: July 18, 1950

FROM : MR. LADD

SUBJECT: JULIUS ROSENBERG
ESPIONAGE - R

There are attached hereto letters to Rear Admiral Sidney W. Souers, Special Consultant to the President; Rear Admiral Robert L. Dennison, Naval Aide to the President; and Mr. James S. Lay, Jr., Executive Secretary, National Security Council, which have been prepared pursuant to your request.

In answer to your question as to why two copies of the blind memorandum were being designated with each letter, it was thought that in view of the fact that Rosenberg had been arrested this matter was of sufficient interest so that each official might desire to have two copies. However, since it is realized that this is a highly restricted matter, only one copy of the blind memorandum is attached for each of the three officials.

San Francisco T-11 on May 18, 1950 advised that the STEINGARTs were still residing at 273 Green Street, San Francisco, but they never seemed to be working and it had always been a mystery to T-11 as to the source of their money.

ADMINISTRATIVE PAGE

In connection with an official investigation in July, 1949, SA HAROLD SPEAKE had occasion to contact HARRY STEINGART, who was then residing at 273 Green Street, San Francisco. Upon ringing the doorbell of STEINGART's apartment, he came to the door and without opening the door inquired of the identity of the caller. Upon being given this information, STEINGART opened the door. At this time agent exhibited credentials and informed STEINGART that an official investigation was being conducted in this apartment of a person being considered for Government employment. Whereupon, STEINGART returned the credentials and said, "I thank you, Sir, but I don't talk to eavesdroppers and spies". With this statement, STEINGART slammed the door in an extremely vicious manner. The agent made no further attempt to interrogate STEINGART. (~~SECRET~~) (U)
